Lincoln South Rotary Scholarship focuses on healthcare

Lincoln South Rotary Club recognizes that there is a shortage of workers in the healthcare field.

The club's scholarship committee, headed by Rotarian Matt Horak, worked with Bryan College of Health Sciences to identify student candidates for a $5,000 scholarship to begin, or continue, their studies in healthcare.

"The Lincoln South Rotary Scholarship is an investment in the future leaders of our community, supporting dedicated students like Hannah Oltmans as they pursue careers in nursing and health sciences," stated Matt Horak, chair of the club's Scholarship Committee.

The recipient of the $5,000 scholarship is Hannah Oltmans who shared "I hope to build strong clinical skills, gain confidence, and learn as much as I can in my first few years as a registered nurse."

She shared "I want to inspire children to pursue their dreams – to see that a career in the healthcare industry is possible for them." She continued "my two main career goals are to improve diversity in the healthcare workforce and to one day volunteer or serve in some capacity in third world countries."

Hannah hopes to have the opportunity to work in a rural hospital as she understands the importance of access to healthcare to everyone in Nebraska.

Rotary International includes 1.2 million members in over 35,000 clubs around the world. To learn about Lincoln South Rotary Club, visit www.lincolnsouthrotary.org.
